Aragorn II

Dunadan Ranger, King of Anor & Gondor.

Source - Lords of Middle Earth II

Aragorn II, son of Arathorn II and Gilraen, also known as Strider and Elessar, was the 16th and last Chieftain of the Dúnedain of the North; later crowned King Elessar Telcontar (March 1, 2931 - FO 120), the 26th King of Anor, 35th King of Gondor and first High King of Gondor and Anor since the short reign of Isildur. He was a great ranger and warrior. As Isildur's heir, he bore the shards of Narsil, reforged and renamed Andúril ("Flame of the West") in the War of the Ring.

From TA 2957 to TA 2980, Aragorn undertook great journeys, serving in the armies of King Thengel of Rohan, and Steward Ecthelion II of Gondor. Many of his tasks helped to raise morale in the West and counter the growing threat of Sauron and his allies, and he earned priceless experience which he would later put to use in the War of the Ring. Aragorn served these lords in disguise and his name in Gondor and Rohan during that time was Thorongil ("Eagle of the Star"). With a small squadron of ships from Gondor, he led an assault on the long-standing City of the Corsairs in 2980, burning many of the Corsairs' ships and personally overthrowing the Captain of the Haven during a battle upon the quays. After the victory at Umbar, "Thorongil" left Gondor and, to the dismay of his men, went east.
